Dear Commissioner Henney,

We are writing as concerned citizens in regard to the genetic engineering of a vast number of our food products. No one really knows of the possible potential dangers of such genetically altered foods.

We are convinced that the American public must be informed if their foods have been genetically altered or irradiated, and that proper labels be affixed to the foods. This will give us, the American consumer, the right to choose between genetically-altered and non-genetically altered products.

We urge you, Secretary Commissioner Henney, to please label our foods, for our choice, and for our protection.

Sincerely,
Lee McLane and Bob McLane
