Sirs:

I am writing to voice my support to labeling requirements for transfatty acids. Hydrogenation of oils is vastly widespread. The general public is unaware that hydrogenation results in transfatty acids or that these trans fats contribute to heart disease.

The amount of trans fats should be included in the existing labeling. It is ~~not~~ now known that trans fats are worse than saturated fat. A person may be avoiding saturated fat and unknowingly consume large amounts of trans fat.

Prevention of heart disease ~~than~~ makes more sense than any action taken after a heart attack and much cheaper.

Sincerely
Alice Sloman
