Dear Ms. Henney:

Until the recent revelations about genetically-modified foods in tacos, I thought just the labeling of these foods was sufficient protection for consumers. But after seeing what can slip into our food supply in one well-publicized instance, I've come to the conclusion that we need both labeling and long-term safety testing of all genetically-engineered food before it goes to market.

I hope the FDA acts swiftly to regulate genetically-modified foods through both testing and labeling.

Sincerely,

Sanford Gottlieb
