Dear Mr. Jaffe:

I have just read about the forced molting of laying chickens. I find this to be very cruel treatment of animals. I would imagine this adds more stress to animals already packed close together. This would probably require more anti biotics which eventually end up when the hen is finally killed, in the consumer.

It is becoming more evident that the widespread use of anti biotics for just about anything is causing concern with the general public. I definately support a ban on the forced molting. please give
