Dear commissioner Henney,

As an American I believe it is my right to know about the food I eat. I believe that genetically altered foods pose a threat to our environment, and do not choose to eat them until I know differently. I also believe there is not enough known about the risk for human consumption. I would not like to feed my family altered food until I know more about them. I am writing to you because I believe altered foods should be labeled as such. We should not be unwilling subjects of potentially dangerous products that benefit a few at the risk of many.
