To whom it may concern,

I am writing to express my feelings against the FDA's recent approval of removing the labelling of irradiated foods. I think this policiy upholds our rights as consumers to know information about the food we eat as well as keeps us from making a choice about what food products we want to eat.

Although I am against irradiated foods, I feel this policy keeps consumers from making educated decissions about what we can and can't eat. Labeling food should not hurt those who irradiate their food, however not labeling, does hurt those who don't irradiate. Sincerely, Brian Lamoreaux
