Dear Mr. Lake,

We are deeply concerned about the genetic engineering of current food (milk) and the possibility of other food being tampered with. We understand that the current U.S. position is that there should be no labeling of such genetically engineered food. Given that science is not foolproof in this area (witness the awful mistake by Monsanto in rbGH and its injection into dairy cows), not only should genetic engineering of our foods be prevented, but at a minimum, the consumer has a right to know what they are ingesting if, indeed, a particular food has been scientifically manipulated from its original form.

Please care enough for everyone's health and future to take this stand at the next CODEX meeting.
