Dear Dr. Sundlof:

We are asking the FDA to ban antibiotics used to promote growth in farm animals.
Rather, the FDA should promote better care for farm animals since it is known that when animals are fed a nutritious diet and live in a healthy environment, growth promoters are not needed.
As consumers we are concerned, since the use of antibiotics on farms contaminates the environment with bacteria that are resistant to antibiotic treatment, and these antibiotic resistant germs are a serious and growing threat to human health. It is actually becoming a matter of life and death!
The FDA must take action against this threat.

Sincerely,

Charlotte + Frank Marchese
