Dear Sirs,

In regards to food irradiation I am definitely against it, as the need is to clean up the problem at the source, for example, in meat packing plants. We can't irradiate + loose all nutritional value, and at the same time cover up the vast hygienic problems of the corporations.

In addition, if food irradiation does become the norm in conventional grown food (as opposed to organics) then you must at least label with a symbol, so that the public can make informed choices. This is just a matter of public awareness.

Sincerely,
Ron + Carol Hirsch
