To Commissioner Jane Henney, M.D.,

I have been hearing a lot about genetically modified organisms (GMOs) lately. Although I can understand wanting to improve yields and products, I am not convinced that splicing DNA from different species together is safe. How will I know whether I am buying bioengineered food in the supermarket if there is not a label giving me the information I desire? Please require labels with the words "bioengineered" or "contains genetically modified organisms".

Thank you,

Suzanne F. Williams
