FDA;

I know our government now works more for business than for people, + to some extent that is ok, but at some point we should draw the line. I think public health is where we should draw that line.

I'm very concerned about feeding anti biotics to livestock. I know antibiotics are loosing their effectiveness from mis-use + over use. One stain of strep is now almost entirely resistant to anti biotics. TB gonnerie + even aids, which is different, are becoming less + less susceptible to modern medicine.

I'm also aware of all the ins + outs, the trade-offs regarding this issue, but think we should side on caution. You could be setting us all up for a bacteria or virus that has no cure. Catastrophic plagues with mortality rates of up to 98-99 per cent of population are a matter of history.

Please put an end to feeding anti biotics to livestock. Don't be responsible for destroying the effectiveness of anti biotics. Even the medical establishment is urging doctors to prescribe fewer antibiotics to patients unless absolutely necessary.

This is a serious matter. Many lives could be at stake – tho we may not know for sure yet, for several more years. A bacteria entirely resistant to anti biotics may already be in the works. The bitter bean already released.

I apologize for my writing. I have MS & this is the best I can do. Be sure to call a moratorium on feeding anti-biotics to livestock.

Sincerely,
Tom Fels
