Dear Ms. Henney: 10-28-99

We have some major health problems in this country which if we take action now, based on sound scientific research, we can avoid. I'm specifically referring to antibiotic resistant strains of bacteria. Scientists can not keep up with this problem of antibiotic resistant bacteria. Until they can, please help us stem the scattering, death, and tide of this health problem by banning livestock producers from routinely adding medically important antibiotics to animal food to promote animal growth.

Sincerely,

Marshell C. Moore
