Dear Sirs;

I recently counseled a young woman that I believe is very representative of our young people. She is sexually active and her only concern is pregnancy. While she is currently taking birth control pills, she wanted to take the morning-after pill too, figuring that if one is good, two is even better.

I am writing to express my concerns about the health risks these teenage girls are willing to take to avoid pregnancy. At what point will taking the MAP or the MAP in combination with other birth control pills affect the health of these young women? Please do NOT make these pills available over-the-counter.

Sincerely,

Annie Norton
