Dear Commissioner Henney:

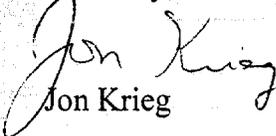

My family and I write with great concern that genetically modified foods should be tested and labeled, and that a moratorium be imposed on them until they are proven safe by truly independent tests.

Consumers deserve and demand to know what we're eating, and we should have a choice in the matter. The potential risks of genetically engineered foods—to both consumers and the environment—are too great. As organic growers, we are very concerned about food being contaminated by "genetic drift."

Again, people should have a choice on what we eat or not. To deny people that choice simply to ensure wide profit margins for agribusiness is simply a sin.

I request a response to this letter from President Clinton and my Congressional representatives.

Sincerely,

Jon Krieg
