

5-17-00

3317 '00 JUN 14 AIO:30

Dear Ms. Henney,

I am writing in regard to the product olestra. I had a very bad experience with the product when it first came out on the market in Frito Lay Wow potato chips. I had such horrible stomach cramps and loose stools that I missed three days of work. The pain was so intense that it was worse than my labor pains when I gave birth to a 10lb. 8oz. baby boy.

There was also a foul smelling vaginal discharge that was "bright" yellow in color, that stained my cotton underwear. I called my family doctor because I thought that I had a bad case of the flu or food poisoning. Then I remembered the only thing different that I ate were the Wow potato chips. My doctor told me that they just have to work their way out of my system. I ate the chips around 6PM and it hit me in the middle of the night. I only ate one handful of the chips.

The notice on the package needs to be made larger and on the front. I would have never purchased this product if I had seen the warning. This product should be taken off the market. If I had this severe reaction being a healthy 46 year old, 120 lb. woman what would it do to a child or a elderly person. I will never buy any product that contains olestra (ocean) ever again. I learned my lesson the hard way.

BOF-0792

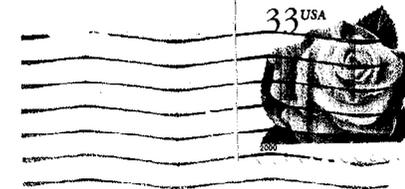

C43

Please do something about this unsafe product. Thank you

Carol A. Tonsetic
511 Pleasant Valley Rd.
Wash. Pa. 15301
724-725-1023

C. Tonsetie
511 PLeASANT VALley RD.
WASH. PA. 15301

JANET HENNEY, M.D. Commissioner, FDA
5600 Fishers LANE
Rockville, MD.
20857

