Dear Dr. Landrigan:

Thank you for your thoughtful letter of January 28, expressing your concern about the Food and Drug Administration's (FDA) final regulation defining the types of statements that can be made concerning the effects of dietary supplements on the structure or function of the human body.

In the final rule, FDA announced that it would not treat as diseases common conditions associated with natural states or processes that do not cause significant or permanent harm and that claims about beneficial effects on such conditions would not be treated as disease claims. FDA stated that claims about common, mild conditions related to pregnancy, such as morning sickness and leg edema, would be considered structure/function claims.

After we published the final rule, we received additional comments such as yours that raised concerns about the safety of dietary supplement use during pregnancy. As a result, on February 9, we issued a statement that advised dietary supplement manufacturers not to make any claims related to pregnancy on their products until additional guidance is issued. The Agency has placed on public display a Federal Register notice announcing that it is holding a public meeting on March 30, in the Crystal Ballroom of the Gaithersburg Hilton to discuss safety issues associated with dietary supplement use during pregnancy. You are certainly encouraged to attend this public meeting. If you wish to speak during the meeting, you will need to file a notice of participation by March 17. The notice of participation form, which can be submitted electronically, will be available at the following web site:
<http://www.fda.gov/cder/calendar/meeting/pregsup2000/default.htm>.

This site will also contain a copy of the Federal Register notice, questions to be addressed, and other relevant information.

Once again, thank you for your comments and concerns.

Sincerely,

Jane E. Henney, M.D.
