

May 4, 2000

Dr. Henney,

I ate one container of Pringles fat-free chips (with olestra) over a 2 day period and got very sick. I had diarrhea several times, then got a painful hemorrhoid which protruded from my rectum. It took about a week to improve, using over-the-counter hemorrhoid creams. Perhaps I should have sought medical help, which would have given credence to my request today. Please keep the warning label on products containing olestra! And please make it more prominent and explicit regarding the probable side effects! I really worry about mothers giving their small children Wow potato chips, thinking it will be healthier than regular chips. Those children might have even worse problems than I did. I think it would be irresponsible for you to allow elimination of the warning label.

Sincerely,

Suzy Ryder

489 Sandstone Court

Boise, ID 83702

208-336-6690

DOF-0792

C29