BACKGROUND:

The Food and Drug Administration (FDA) Office of Regulatory Science's (ORS) Winchester Engineering and Analytical Center (WEAC) is responsible for analyzing regulated products for radioactive contaminants and samples for routine surveillance and radiological or nuclear emergencies. These analyses require the use of radioactive material, which is regulated by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC) under the Office of Regulatory Science's NRC License No. 201-08631-01. The license specifies that ORS establishes a radiation safety program to ensure the safety of the workers processing products containing, and conducting research involving, radioactive material and to ensure the safety of the general public. Although most of this work is completed at WEAC which is an ORS laboratory, some minor work involving tritium is also conducted at ORS's Northeast laboratory in New York and ORS's Pacific Northwest Laboratory in Seattle. Additionally, one non-ORS lab is also covered under ORS's NRC license; FDA's Center Drug Evaluation and Research's (CDER) Division of Pharmaceutical Analysis (DPA) laboratory in St Louis holds a sealed Nickel-63 source.

One specific term of this license is to have the radiation safety program audited every year by a third-party health physics firm. This process ensures not only adherence to current NRC safety regulations, but also allows for continual improvement of the radiation safety program.

SCOPE

- Assessment/ Radiation audit may be completed by a qualified health physicist but final report must be reviewed by a senior health physicist or a certified health physicist
- At a minimum, the Assessment/ Radiation audit shall include a review each of the following components of ORS’s radiation safety program:
