

Pediatric Safety Update –References in Briefing Material on Flu

1. Morishima T et al. Encephalitis and encephalopathy associated with an influenza epidemic in Japan. Clin Infect Dis 2002; 35:512-7.
2. Togashi T et al. Influenza-associated acute encephalopathy in Japanese children in 1994-2002. Virus Research 2004; 103: 75-8.
3. Okabe N et al. Influenza surveillance system of Japan and acute encephalitis and encephalopathy in the influenza season. Ped Int 2000; 42(2):187
4. Huang Y-C et al. Influenza A-associated central nervous system dysfunction in children presenting as transient visual hallucination. Pediatr Infect Dis J 2003, 22(4): 366-368.
5. Sugaya N. Influenza-associated encephalopathy in Japan. Sem in Pediatr Infect Dis 2002; 13(2):79-84.
6. Okumura A et al. Delirious behavior in children with influenza: its clinical feature and EEG findings. Brain and Development 2005; 27:271-4.
7. Newland JG et al. Encephalitis associated with influenza B virus infection in 2 children and a review of the literature. Clin Infect Dis 2003; 36:e87-95.
8. Maricich S et al. Neurologic complications associated with influenza A in children during the 2003-2004 influenza season in Houston, Texas. Pediatr 2004; 114:e626-33.
9. Severe morbidity and mortality associated with influenza in children and young adults - Michigan, 2003. MMWR 2003; 52(35):837-40.
10. Update: Influenza-associated deaths reported among children aged < 18 years - United States, 2003-04 influenza season. MMWR 2004; 52(53):1286-8.
11. Sugaya N. & Takeuchi, Y. Mass vaccination of school children against influenza and its impact on influenza-associated Mortality rate among children in Japan. CID 2005; 41:939-947