Dear Mr. Levitt:

Consumers have a right to know what they are drinking and its treatment. I support FDA's proposal to have bottled water manufacturers make detailed reports of their contaminants available. I also would like to see VOC's (volatile organic compounds) tested after water has been in bottles for at least a week as would be normal in a store. Only then can a true comparison be made between bottled and tap water. Any treatment before bottling should be included on the label for customer's immediate information.

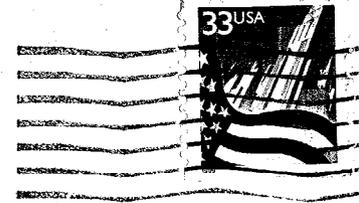

Sincerely,

Randy Williams
