

Violet J. Wilcoxon

From: Violet J. Wilcoxon <swpaint@kiva.net>
To: [REDACTED]
Sent: Thursday, April 27, 2000 7:23 PM
Subject: Olestra

Dear Sirs,

In March of 1997 I bought a new product called Wow potato chips, they were sold at a great price and very little if any fat so I bought them. I did not read the label and ate a lot of them.

The next day I went to work and a lady I work with and I were talking about the new chips, she asked me if I had read the label and I said no, after I read it I wished I had not eaten the chips.

That very day I had stomach cramps, followed by severe diarrhea and later flatulence. I had a yellow greasy mess in my clothes, it was terrible! I had this for three days! Needless to say I have never bought the chips again....

The label on the packages should STAY and should be even larger in my opinion.

I won't even eat chips unless I see the bag in case they are made with olestra. I will not forget this, and I wish they would take everything off the shelves that contains olesta.

Right after this happened someone had the nerve to call me to see if I would participate in a survey, I was to eat the chips again! They offered to pay me, quite well I might add, I declined, did they think I was nuts! They were from P&G as I recall.

It is a good thing my friend had read the label because I would have thought this could have been several other things, I am a healthy person so this was not normal for me.

In closing this was a scary experience for me, I pray I never eat olesta again it worries me it could be in foods I don't know about.

Truly, Violet J. Wilcoxon
 swpaint@kiva.net

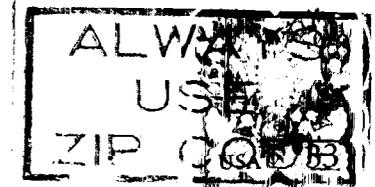

5613 00 MAY -5 P2:01

00F-0792

@13

04/27/2000

*Violet J. Wilcoxon
633 S. 6th St.
Mitchell, In. 47446*

*Janet Henney, M.D.
Commissioner FDA
5600 Fishers Lane
Rockville, MD 20857*

