

TABLE OF CONTENTS

TABLE OF CONTENTS

SECTION 1

Summary	4
Background	5
Incidence of Fertility Disorders in the US	5
Prevalence of Vaginal Dryness in Infertile Couples	6
Evidence that Existing Vaginal Lubricants Damage Sperm	6
Why Vaginal Lubricants Damage Sperm	9
Current Physician & Consumer Knowledge of Lubricant-Sperm Interactions	10
Why There is Confusion Regarding Lubricant Use While TTC	12
The Need for Vaginal Lubricant Labeling	13
Proposed Labeling Changes for Vaginal Lubricants	14
Proposed Special Testing for Lubricants to Be Used While TTC	15
Conclusions	20
The Authors	21
SECTION 2 References	22

SECTION 3

Appendix A

Published Reports on the Effects of Lubricants on Sperm Function
 Summary Table of Published Effects of Lubricants on Sperm Motility

SECTION 4

Appendix B

Excerpts from Medical Related Internet Sites Regarding the Safety of Lubricant
Use While Trying to Conceive

SECTION 5

Appendix C

Examples of Preconception Websites with Discussions on the Safety of Lubricant
Use While Trying to Conceive

SECTION 6

Appendix D

Examples of Claims Made by Lubricant Manufacturers Regarding the Use of Their Product While Trying to Conceive

SECTION 7

Appendix E

Excerpts from Preconception Chat Rooms Highlighting the Need for Lubricant Labeling

SECTION 8

Appendix F

Abstracts and In Process Publications Comparing the Effects of Different Lubricants and Moisturizers on Sperm Using Some of the Proposed Assays